News.

"The President has decided to call an extra session of Congress." "The President has not decided to call an extra session of Congress." A good-sized newspaper in any city of the United States which keeps up with the gossip-sometimes called news-of the day, has, probably, published the first of the foregoing statements, in some form or other, half a dozen times at least; and the latter half as many. It is, indeed, astonishing how much news can be made up out of no greater mass of material. The President is thinking about an extra session-he has threatened an extra session-he is fully impressed with the necessity of an extra sessionhe is upon the point of deciding for an extra session-he has determined to call an extra session-he has issued orders for an extra session-writs have been perfected to convene an extra session. It is to meet in July-in September-after the fall elections, and so forth, and so forth, to the end of the chapter. Now, per contra: the President has not called an extra session-has not determined to call an extra session; and this, as before, through all the moods and tenses: each one of the different phases stated in a paragraph; each paragraph an item of news; and each item of news put forth as a matter of interest "to our numerous read-

But this is not all: the subject is enlarged upon. The able editor discusses it in a leader, clongated with all the knowledge he has, and very much that he has not, about the wishes of the President's advisers, influential members of the Democratic party, parallel cases, with here and there an allusion to General JACKSON, or peradventure THOMAS JEF-FERSON, the great apostle of Democracy. Our sagacious Washington correspondent" devotes a letter to the subject, which, by a strange coincidence, embodies nearly the same ideas in nearly the same words. The gentleman of the news department discovers that something is in the wind about a session, and daily plies the scissors accordingly; while, if we have a column of exclusive telegraphic dispatches, nothing is more likely to figure in it extensively than matters touching the possible, probable and certain, or impossible, anyahahla and uncertain extra session of Congress; and all with startling captions and sensational head-lines, to indicate that it is a matter of the utmost im-

Talking-Talkers.

"In truth, sir, I must say that, in my opinion, the vernacular tongue of the country has become greatly vitiated, depraved and corrupted by the style of our Congressional debates. And if it were possible for our debates in Congress to vitinte the principles of the people as much as they have depraved their taste, I should cry out, 'God save the Republic.'"—Mr. Webster's speech on the Compromise.

It is fortunate, perhaps, for the people of the United States, that to print, and to read, a speech delivered in Congress are two very different things. If all the speeches that find their way into print. either through the private enterprise of their authors, or the instrumentality of that vast repertory of insane and pretentious gabble-the Congressional Globewere thereby insured a general reading by all whom they are supposed to concern, it would be impossible to tell to what a pitch of chaotic inconsecutiveness and blind stupidity, in respect to principle, the people of this Union would not arrive. A very little of this style of literature is this or that office. We have known offices, all that is necessary for anybody; andstrange as it may appear to those who make and publish legislative orations-a very little is all that is perused; and in this comforting fact there is a strong element of safety and tranquillity, public and private.

Nevertheless there is a vitiation, if not of principle, of habit, which is nearly as bad, in this universal publication. It tends to establish, as the standard by which to estimate the characters of publie men, not what they have DONE, but what they have said. In this talking age, to say is not always to do. Those who say a great deal, frequently do but very little. Any practice, therefore, which serves to give importance to what is said, aids to keep out of sight what is done; and therein works injustice. A few brave words, standing out of a vast expanse of common-place-a hillock of froth upon an ocean of twaddle-snatched up by an able editor and embalmed in the form of a taking paragraph, and, behold! a great man has arisen among us. Of course, he is short lived; but by the time his collapse is made palpable, another has come up in his stead, to run a similar race, and encounter a similar West Third street, under the able management destiny. The capacity to remember the of Mr. Samuel E. Mack, Agent of the Com-city is wisdom-an uncommon ar ticle in any market. With the great majority of mankind, the brilliancy of the present divinity is enough to obliterate all recollections of the past. They come and depart like shadows; but while they remain, what are they but gods?

The man who has said the most in our day-who has produced the largest number of vibrations of the public tympanum-is the Hon. STEPHEN A. Doug-LAS. Of brave words he has been, of all men, the most lavish and profuse; of passages of "startling eloquence" he is so often delivered, that Fame seems scarcely endowed with wind cauragh to give to each its appropriate blast in due order and season. Indeed, her ladyship must have had a hard time of it with the Senator of Illinois, and it would be no wonder if her lungs were in a condition almost as alarming as his wardrobe is said to have been at the close of the late campaign. Recently she appears to have pretermitted her efforts; but whether from considerations of health, or lack of occasion, does not appear. If all that he has done turns out to be simply a multiplication of words, how extreme are his offenses, and how signal will be his punishment. He will go out; and a vast cloud of silence will brood over him-at once an extinguisher and a monument.

We want all the great men we can get: and he who is not ready to fall on his knees and thank God for it the moment that he is convinced that there has really a great man arisen, is made of materials fit only to be wrought into a quadruped We will not say that a man is not great because he has made innumerable speeches, been the subject of ditto, made by others, because he has for years filled all the columns of all the newspapers, and been incensed with an infinitude of complimentary harangues, toasts and resolutions; but we do exceedingly suspect the stability of that species of greatness, and tremble at the peril he is exposed to whom it belongs. To talk and to be talked about are suspicious circumstances; to talk idly, and be the subject of idle talking, very alarming.

THE LIFE SPEECHES AND MEMORIALS OF DANIEL WEBSTER, By Samuel M. Smucker, A. M. Philadelphia: D. Bulkon, Cincinnati: Anderson, Gates & Weight. 1 vol. 12mo.

One hundred and fifty pages of this volume are ecupied by a biographical sketch of Mr. Wessers. the remaining four hundred contain his most celebrated orations, and a selection from the eulogies delivered on the occasion of his decease; of the forme mly it is necessary to speak. So far as we are able to discover, it contains nothing new-no new facts in the history of its subject, or new views of his character. It is a handsome volume, and a well-written biography, in the style of literary production which now so popular, and containing much that is of

ANNUAL OF SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY FOR 1859, Edited by David A. Wells, A. M., Boston: Gould & Lincoln, Cincinnati: G. S. Blanchard. The general character of this work is too well known to need description. As a repertory of intelligence

n respect to the movements of scientific bodies, the reneral tendency of the scientific mind, and the discoveries and improvements that have been made within the year, it is valuable. To the general reader it contains many matters of interest. The present number is embellished with a singularly-bad and distressingly-like engraving of Prof. O. M. MITCHELL.

HOME INTERESTS.

Home Insurance Company of New York .- This Company has been in existence for the space of ten years; and during that period has witnessed many days which "tried men's souls," yet it has passed unscathed through every tribulation, and now is seen rising above the retiring clouds of the recent storm in all the majesty of a well-constructed edifice, whose foundation is on a rock. The Home Insurance Company is exclusively a company for insuring against Fire.

We need hardly tell our readers at this hour of the day that the nature of the Fire-Insurance contract is this: "The insurer, in consideration of a certain premium received by him, either in a gross sum or by annual payments undertakes to indemnify the insured against all loss or damage which he may sustain in his houses or other buildings, stock, goods and merchandise, by fire, during a limited period of time." This is the general principle; but each office is distinguished by some peculiarity (or advantage) of its own, which, however, does not alter the essential condition of the contract. The points of special interest to those who desire to insure their property against fire, are not those that refer to certain so-called advantages as to interest, time of payment, or other insignificant considerations, and which are not unfrequently blazoned forth to the public as sufficient inducement to patronize both Fire and Life, which, in the rage of competition, positively threw overboard the wellestablished and prudent scale of probabilities, and adopted in its stead the suicidal one of 'possible chances." The consequence was that some of them "burst up," while others, ere the evil day had come round to them, wisely discarded their non-paying policy, and adopted the system of old and experienced houses, and so escaped the ruin which the risky course they had set out on would inevitably have led to. It is evident, then, that the first question which the insurer should settle is, the condition or state of the pecuniary affairs of the Company. If he can be satisfied on this head-that the assets of the Company are boses fide assets, and that the liabilities are not extensive-let him next inquire as to the age and respectability of the Company, and especially as to its dealings with those of its patrons who have lost their property-whether they are honorable or mean, manly and above-board, or tricky and litigious. If these inquiries can be answered to his satisfaction, he should not allow the gilded show-board of another office which promises the tempting balt of "a lower rate of neurance" to allure him to a risk which may result in loss, and possibly in ruin both to himself and his family.

It is a pleasing duty we have to perform, this morning, that of drawing public atlention to the "Home Insurance Company, of New York," which has an office in this city, at 35 BROWN & VALLETTE, NO. 4 EAST Fourth street, are now prepared to supply, in any quantity, the very best article of "Buckeye Coal of Mr. Samuel E. Third street, 3 doors Main.

while the business transacted har, in no year, exceeded $560,000 par premium. It is a fact worth bearing in mind, that at the present time this Company could re-insure all the risks now entered on their books, and have remaining more than $1,000,000 assets.

The cash capital of the Home Company has been increased by additional subscriptions, amounting to $100,000; the Directors never make dividends until funds are fully earned, while they are always prompt (as well as being pecuniarily able) to pay up all loses, without unnecessary delay or a resort to quirks and dratagems, to evade their responsibilities.

Mr. Mack, the Agent, is too well known in this city, having been here about ten years, to equire any commendation from us. He will be happy to answer any inquiries which persons thinking of insuring may wish to have answered; and whatever he does for such parties will be proved, by the result, to be as advantageous to them and as conservative of their interests, as his upright and intelligent management has been satisfactory to the Directors ever since his connection with them.

We could adduce numerous instances of promptly paid-up liabilities arising from fire, which show that this is a Company that should be trusted and patronized, but neither time nor space will permit us to write another

Books on Phrenology, Physiology, Self-culture, Memory, Marriage, and all of Fowler & Wells' publications, are sold wholesale and retail by A. Hutchinson, Vine street, above Fourth.

Who would think that one could get his likeness taken for a twenty-five cent piece? Such, however, is the fact, and the place is at the Broadway Gallery of Art.

For fine Melainotypes, Ambrotypes or Photographs, go to Bishop's, No. 58 West Fourth street, between Walnut and Vine. The Central Dining Saloon is the most popular eating place in the city, and its proprietor, John Macdonald, will always be found on hand. Ball & Thomas' Pictures are proverbial for their beauty and originality-esoscially those Photographs, which they get up n the most superior style.

Winder's Picture Gallery is so crowded now-a-days that he cays he will have to enlarge. We like to chronicle such facts. [See Home Interests on 1st page.]

Cincinnavi, February 13, 1859.

About a mouth ago I called at Dr. Ayer's "Throat and Lung Institute," 30 West Fourth street, for treatment for Tomilitis and Chronic Inflammation of the Throat. The tomils and uvula (or pulate) were so much enlarged that there seemed to be but one course to pursue, and that was to cut them off; this I had been told by other physiciams, who had also candidly toldrine they could not cure use. Dr. Aver made a careful examination and pronounced excision unnecessary, and prescribed Medicated Inhalation and topical applications, with general freatment, and the result is a prayer runuary! The inflammation has been allayed, and the toneds and palair reduced to their matural size and position. I now have so screeness or difficulty whatever of the throat, and fractions of difficulty whatever of the throat, and fractional them is the last which is a place of the confidence. His mode of freatment is rational pleasant, and certainly in my case auccessing and I have every reason to believe the Doctor is equally successful in all other cases while I have been under treatment at the Institute.
